Good News.....

My daughters had different approaches to food. One daughter, who would eat almost anything, could look in a cabinet or refrigerator full of food and declare, "There's nothing to eat," because nothing in them was exactly what she wanted at the time. My other daughter, who was a somewhat finicky eater, could usually find something to eat no matter how meager the offerings, simply because she wasn't that particular—it just had to satisfy her hunger. We used to tease that in a famine the younger would outlast the elder because her foraging skills were better.

In today's discourse about the Bread of Life, Jesus is trying to get the crowd to let go of the idea that only one particular spiritual food could nourish them. As he continues to identify himself as the true bread, the people become more agitated and confused. How could the food Jesus offered be better than the food God gave their ancestors in the desert? Jesus answers them: manna was food for bodily nourishment only—it could not give someone eternal life. Everyone was still subject to famine, starvation, and death. By contrast, the spiritual food that is Christ brings eternal life forever to those who eat and drink it. No famine, sword, or persecution can touch that life. For John the evangelist, the believers in Christ had eternal life already, and those who did not believe were perishing. Eternal life is the gift of baptism. What kind of food is in you today?

Good News..... August 22 & 23, 2015 Twenty-First Sunday in Ordinary Time

When confronted with a new idea or a new way of doing things, many of us hesitate. There is often a bit of fear in trying something new and, truth be told, changing the way we do things is sometimes uncomfortable. I remember when we moved from an apartment to a new house. I was very unsettled for several days until a new routine could be established and the many boxes were out of the way. It was a change, and I didn't like it at first. (Now, of course, I can't imagine that we would have raised our family anywhere else.)

The many disciples who were following Jesus listened intently as he talked to them about living bread and eating and drinking his flesh and blood. That new way of thinking was as unsettling as our new house had been, maybe more so. The apostles who were closest to him even admitted that it was a hard saying to accept, and John records that many followers left him and "returned to their former way of life." But the apostles were willing to wrestle with it not because they were so wise, smart, or understanding, but because they believed that Jesus was the Holy One of God and that compelled them to follow him even to death. They had nowhere else to go; Jesus alone could give them what they craved: eternal life.

I've often wondered what I might have said had Jesus asked me if I wanted to go away also. I hope I could have overcome my fear long enough to recognize Jesus for who he was and for the gift he was bringing me.

FROM PASTOR'S DESK:

As we continue reflecting upon Pope Francis' recent Encyclical, "On Care for Our Common Home", we strive to get beyond a superficial reading of the entire document, and an overall glossing over of some of its finer points and challenges. In fact, unless we are challenged in either our hearing and reading of Scripture and the Church teachings, then perhaps we are not listening and paying close enough attention. Never should we get up after engaging in such reading, whereby we do not in some degree question whether we could not do more or change in a given area, as we have failed to take the message to heart. In paragraphs #15+16, Pope Francis tells the process he will be following in outlining what he recognizes as being crucial in addressing this whole topic, in the light of the best scientific research available in the light of principles drawn from our Judaeo-Christian tradition, then exploring the roots of the present situation to get beyond its symptoms to its deepest causes, as he calls for dialogue and action from the individual level to the stage of international policy. He recognizes that while each chapter of the Encyclical will have its particular, the following themes will continue re-emerging: "the intimate relationship between the poor and the fragility of the planet, the conviction that everything in the world is connected, the critique of new paradigms and forms of power derived from technology, the call to seek other ways of understanding the economy and progress, the value proper to each creature, the human meaning of ecology, the need for forthright and honest debate, the serious responsibility of international and local policy, the throwaway culture and the proposal of a new lifestyle" [16]. While "change is something desirable, yet it becomes a source of anxiety when it causes harm to the world and to the quality of life of much of humanity"; as "the goals of this rapid and constant change are not necessarily geared to the common good or to integral & sustainable human development" [18]. "Following a period of irrational confidence in progress and human abilities, some sectors of society are now adopting a more critical approach. We see increasing sensitivity to the environment and the need to protect nature, along with a growing concern, both genuine and distressing, for what is happening to our planet" [19]. In nature we find that there are natural ecosystems that work perfectly, but this is not the case in our industrial system, "at the end of its cycle of production and consumption, has not developed the capacity to absorb and reuse waste and by-products" but unfortunately seems to produce waste that are clogging more of our precious space because it doesn't work as nature does. [22]. While some attempts have been made to re-use and re-cycle, it is still not keeping up with the waste ending up in landfills. {To be continued.....}
