Good News.....

My mother always thought I was a little bit stubborn. “Not stubborn,” I said, “but sometimes, I think things should be done a different way.” What I usually meant by that was that things should be done my way. “I know,” she said, “stubborn.” I recalled that conversation when my daughters reached the same age that I was when I thought my mother was dumb and didn’t know anything and my desire was to do always what I thought best. They have since conceded that I might know a little, just as I gave my mother that same credit as I got older. We all have our periods of stubbornness. Sometimes we are right; sometimes we can be persuaded differently, and sometimes we have to persist until our mistakes become evident even to us, even if that means we suffer the consequences of our folly.

The people of Nazareth were astonished at Jesus’ teaching and wisdom. Their stubborn refusal to believe in him grew out of their familiarity. “We know him and his family,” they thought, “He can’t possibly have this power.” Stubbornness is a hard thing to overcome. Mark records that Jesus was amazed at their refusal to believe. Their very refusal made it difficult for him to perform mighty deeds (a phrase used of God in the Old Testament), and so he did what he could: He healed a few sick people. Some of us still have a stubborn streak. Has that ever interfered in our recognition of God’s power? Do we hang on to our belief that our way is best even if that hurts us? Reflect on that.

Good News..... July 12, 2015 FIFTEENTH SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

Spiritually, discernment is the process of listening for and responding to God's call. It is a popular activity these days in churches, schools, and businesses. Discerning the right career, the right person for a job—or even the right person to marry—occupies a lot of adults. I often talk about discernment with college students because Catholic tradition has much to offer to the process.

We can draw some principles of discernment from our readings today. From Ephesians, we learn that God has called us into the mission of Christ and to praise his glory in the world. Does the life you live now allow you to do that with a full heart? From Amos, we learn that God doesn't call only the ones we think are holy enough, brave enough, or religious enough. God calls all of us wherever he finds us. Amos was a dresser of sycamore trees. We might be teachers, parents, or students in school, but we are all a part of Christ's mission by baptism. Finally, in Mark, we learn that mission is a communal affair. We are together in mission. We are to go into every house, depending on God to tell us what to do and give us what we need.

With our different gifts, we help each other spread God's word and love those we meet. Finally, we learn that not everyone will hear us, but we must not let that weigh us down. We must shake the dust from our feet and move on. These and other principles of discernment can apply no matter where we find ourselves along the road. How have you responded to God's call today?

FROM PASTOR'S DESK:

Perhaps one of the most refreshing and also challenging aspect of Pope Francis' recent encyclical [Laudato Si – “Praised Be to You, My Lord”] is its breadth and its all-encompassing nature. Pope Francis has addressed this encyclical not just to Catholics but to every person on the planet, for we all share a common home, and has also drawn from a variety of sources to make his points. Pope Francis is asking everyone: “What kind of world do we want to leave to those who come after us, to children who are now growing up? This question does not have to do with the environment alone and in isolation; the issue cannot be approached piecemeal.” [160] Far from just restricting his comments to caring for the ecology and basing himself on the matter of “climate change”, Pope Francis invites us to broaden our perspective to include our sensitivity to all matters impacting human life on this planet, including caring for the poor and the most vulnerable in our midst such as the unborn, people with disabilities and victims of human trafficking. All is related because we cannot claim to care about one part of creation, whether it be the ecology or animals, without at the same time being passionate about the sufferings all human beings, be they the poor and the unborn, Rather than adopting a defeatist attitude that all is lost, Pope Francis inspires a constant message of hope that “humanity still has the ability to work together in building our common hope [13]; we are still capable of intervening positively.” [58] As we work our way through this extensive encyclical, it becomes clear that we are being called to a profound interior conversion in terms of re-examining and renewing our relationships with God, one another and the whole created world. This moral and spiritual challenge is one that should resonate with us as Catholic Christians, as our entire lives are meant to be lived with a constant focus upon the call to conversion, strengthening and deepening our bond with God by responding with greater love and compassion to one another and in harmony with our world. As we acknowledge God to be our Creator and of all that exists, we recognize that He has entrusted the world as a gift, for which we also have a considerable responsibility to care and protect, just as do for one another, so that it might be passed on to future generations on a living and healthy legacy. In this regard, Pope Francis invites us to recognize our inter-connectedness with all that God has created + our shared solidarity with each other and the created world. St. Paul's letter to the Romans speaks to this connection: “From the beginning till now the entire creation, as we know, has been groaning in one great act of giving birth; and not only creation, but all of us who possess the first-fruits of the Spirit, we too groan inwardly as we wait for our bodies to be set free.” (Romans 8:22-23) [..... To be continued.....]
